Reader's Forum

She laughed at my lack of understanding. "In our culture, this world ain't our home."

"Ah. I've got ya," I laughed with understanding. "It's been a long way back home for Darryl," I noted.

"You got that right," his mother responded. "But his home-going is going to be so different because of what happened in these last two years," she smiled.

I could only nod with satisfaction. Darryl had worked hard these past two years. He had role-modeled the humility, courage, and honesty I needed to seek in my own life. He had become the hero in his life the way I wanted to become in my own. ■
